1 Before 1974, Associates and Lecturers were usually full-time. After 1974, and especially after there were graduate students, each person might teach one or two classes per year.

2 Professors, including Associate and Assistant Professors, are full-time unless noted by a triangle: ▲.

3 Staff includes only “career” staff, not those hired temporarily on grants and not students working for professors. Most of the staff have known percentage times (50%, 75%, and 100%), but some of the staff — most particularly among those hired to work for specific professors (Estes and Mertes) — were not in the FTE (Full Time Equivalent) system and, thus, their percentage time was not available in the documentation researched.

4 Researchers do not include the many in organized research units (for instance, ICESS). Thus, the graph does not show the extent of research going on in the Department. The large burst in visiting researchers in the late 1990s and early 2000s are predominantly visitors to NCGIA.
